

THE CREATOR GRATITUDE

The Practice of Source Recognition

Companion Workbook to The Creator

How to Use This Workbook

This workbook is not for passive reading. It is for installation. Each prompt is designed to move Creator Gratitude from a nice idea into the daily, felt mechanics of self-love. Use a dedicated journal alongside this. Write without editing yourself.

Complete one section per day or per week. Recognition is not a mood to chase. It is a practice to repeat until self and Source stop reading as two different things.

Section One: Gratitude Inventory

Most gratitude is aimed at outcomes, and outcomes are conditional. This section asks for something steadier: gratitude for the sheer, prior fact of existing at all.

Prompt 1: What are you grateful for at the level of existence itself — not outcomes, not achievements?

Write until it stops sounding like a list and starts sounding true.

Prompt 2: Where does your gratitude still feel transactional or conditional — reserved for when things go well?

Prompt 3: What would change if your gratitude required nothing to have gone right first?

Section Two: The Separation Audit

You cannot fully claim the reality you are architecting while relating to Source as something outside yourself. This section finds where that separation is still quietly operating.

Prompt 4: Where do you still relate to the Creator, or to Source, as something outside yourself — waiting for permission, blessing, or proof?

Prompt 5: What belief sits underneath each of those places?

Prompt 6: If self-love and Source-love were already the same thing, what would you stop waiting for?

Section Three: Daily Gratitude Practice

Install this as a non-negotiable practice. Hands on the heart, or open to the sky. Declare: I am the Creator and the Creator is me. Offer gratitude for the vessel and the moment, not the outcome.

Day 1

Where did self-love and Source-love feel like one thing today? Where did they still feel like two?

Day 2

Day 3

Continue this practice daily for 21 days. Use your journal once this page is full.

Then review. The gap will already be smaller.

The Vow of the Creator

I vow to stop treating gratitude as a request and start practicing it as a remembrance. I will love myself the way I love the force that made me, because they were never two things. I will let self-love become the boundary and the magnet it already is.
