

THE FIELD BOUNDARY

The Practice of Sealing the Field

Companion Workbook to The Field

How to Use This Workbook

This workbook is not for passive reading. It is for installation. Each prompt is designed to move the Field Boundary from an idea into a sealed, daily-enforced perimeter. Use a dedicated journal alongside this. Write without editing yourself.

Complete one section per day or per week. The field does the holding once you have done the declaring.

Section One: Naming What's No Longer Allowed

The field cannot seal around what has not been named. This section asks you to state, plainly and without softening, what no longer belongs.

Prompt 1: What people, dynamics, frequencies, patterns, sounds, or places are no longer allowed in your field?

Do not soften the list to make it comfortable.

Prompt 2: Which of these has been hardest to actually enforce?

Section Two: The Incompatible Match Audit

You do not push the unwanted out. You become incompatible with it. This section finds where you are still, quietly, a match for what you claim to have excluded.

Prompt 3: For each item named above, where are you still an energetic match to it — the habit, the tolerance, the door left open?

Prompt 4: What is one habit or tolerance you could retire this week that would make you a cleaner match for what you actually want?

Section Three: Daily Field Sealing Practice

Install this as a non-negotiable practice. Stand or sit as the center of your field. Name what is no longer allowed. Declare: This is incompatible with my existence. It cannot survive here.

Day 1

Where did the field hold today? Where did it leak?

Day 2

Day 3

Continue this practice daily for 21 days. Use your journal once this page is full.

Then review. The field will already be enforcing more of this without your effort.

The Vow of the Field

I vow to stop negotiating with what no longer belongs in my field. I will declare my standard daily, until the field enforces it without my effort. I will become so precisely matched to what I am building that the rest simply cannot survive here.
